Agricultural Geography is concerned with the spatial variations, distribution and location of agricultural activities on the earth's surface and the factors responsible for them. It is dominated by the interrelationship and effects of both physical and socio-economic factors on spatial farm enterprises and farm operations. Agricultural Geography addresses bio-physical determinants of agricultural patterns and productivity; socio-cultural and economic determinants of agricultural patterns and productivity; agricultural activities and spatial organization; agricultural decision making analysis; agricultural technological changes; agriculture and economic development; and global emerging issues in agriculture from spatial and temporal perspectives.
