

Preparing postgrads for research: Methodological summer school in Nandi Hills, Kenya

The French Institute for Research in Kenya (IFRA-Nairobi), the French Institute for Research in Nigeria (IFRA-Ibadan), the French Institute for Research in South Africa (IFAS) in collaboration with Moi University, University of Nairobi and Makerere University, and supported by the National Centre for Scientific Research (CNRS), the Institut de Recherches pour le Développement (IRD) and the Institut national d'études démographiques (INED), organized a methodological summer school in Nandi Hills (16th to 23rd July 2018). The summer school brought together participants (MA/MSc and PhD candidates) from Kenya, Tanzania, Ethiopia, Nigeria, South Africa, Zimbabwe and Mozambique. The objective of the summer school series is to improve junior researchers' methodological skills by offering in-door courses supplemented by fieldwork training supervised by advanced researchers. It also aims at helping networking and strengthening institutional relationships between African and French universities and research centers. The summer school was largely facilitated by Marie-Emmanuelle Pommerolle, Chloé Josse-Durand (IFRA-Nairobi), Elodie Apard, Emilie Guitard (IFRA-Ibadan), Claire Médard (IRD), Valérie Golaz (INED), Samuel Owuor (University of Nairobi), Eric Masese (Moi University) and Merit Kabugo (Makerere University).
